

Intelligence Archetypes

Written by NHA

Tuesday, 12 August 2008 13:17 - Last Updated Monday, 05 July 2010 06:37

Intelligence Archetypes

If we look at the archetypes, intelligence has 3 presentations:

- The Godhead: intelligence as universal awareness, creator of all things, everywhere and in every thing
- The Son: individual intelligence as a human example
- The Spirit: the act of trying to follow or aligning with the program itself (or yet, the 'Tune' in Zeppelinian allegorical language)

These could be contemporarily called:

- Universal Intelligence: god
- Intelligence: in humans -a living example of intelligence, like (theoretically) Jesus, Mohammed or the Buddha
- Entelechy: doing things in the spirit of intelligence -the 'holy spirit'

You will find this everywhere, described according to various 'maps' of reality: the triple spiral or any kind of 'three-legged' symbols or 'triskelion' (as our logo), yin / yang and unity, father / son and holy ghost, left / right and center, nature / nurture and intent, mother

Intelligence Archetypes

Written by NHA

Tuesday, 12 August 2008 13:17 - Last Updated Monday, 05 July 2010 06:37

goddess / son or daughter of light and nature spirits, Brahma / Siva and Visnu, master / student and area of study, wizard / apprentice and the path, blue / red and green, white / black and gray...

Ultimately: good input / power (inspiration, motivation) and safe space (in which to grow).

To 'inspire' is to breath in the spirit. You know, like: "the spirit of rock'n'roll, dude!!"

When all three bond, they become one; they form a matrix (and the whole is more than the sum of its parts).